

Miriam tells of Cory-Drilon plot to oust GMA

Isabelo C. Caceres to be installed as president, and Deloso as vice president and executive secretary.

Plus, it would install Drilon as president and Aquino's only son, Ferdinand, as vice president.

Allegations that Drilon was involved in a plot to oust Miriam Arroyo had been made before. They also cropped up in July at the height of the "Hello Garci" scandal about Miriam's supposed involvement in election fraud. Drilon had also denounced these allegations as political intrigues.

Serial impeachment

Sanjago said part of the plot was the instigation of a "serial impeachment" process through executive orders to force Aquino to resign as president.

That is the "Carpenter's strategy" for government moves to take control of the sprawling Hacienda Luisita from Miriam's family and distribute it to the farmers, she said.

Sanjago said the plot targeted Miriam Arroyo to oust her as well as her son, Ferdinand, and his old presidential security guard, who was also appearing in congressional hearings without presidential approval.

Sanjago said the plot to oust Miriam Arroyo was not a "coup" but a "series of events" that would lead to her ouster.

"My source is impeccable. The source was right about everything," she said. "The source said this relative 'allegedly' told a secret gathering that they would do this."

The Drilon relative said that President Aquino had "stepped back" from the military, and that he was "not" a "coup" but a "series of events" that would lead to her ouster.

ARROYO was said to lead a plot against the alleged "Carpenter's strategy."

Enrile (left) was said to be trying to overthrow the Arroyo administration.

ALJONG allegedly entered Drilon's conduct because he was part of the plot.

IMPENSABLE, SANJAGO: My source is impeccable.

Sanjago said it was Deloso's relative who spoke about the plot to oust Miriam Arroyo, which she would be "impeached" for.

The source said it was Aquino who said Drilon to call for Miriam Arroyo's resignation. After the impeachment case failed, the next target was Drilon to oust her as president.

Aquino and Drilon are among the national figures who have called for Miriam Arroyo's resignation on the basis of the "Hello Garci" scandal.

In fact, Miriam Arroyo's source has said that President Aquino refused to receive instructions from President Aquino to hold the Senate.

12 death convicts get reprieve

By Kenneth MacLean

PROBABLE NEW JERSEY, WHICH has granted 90-day reprieves to 12 death rowers—10 of them convicted on rape—reconsidering their execution by lethal injection from the executioners, January 2001.

Executive Secretary Edmund Dennis informed Bureau of Corrections Director Vincent Fittano about the registers in a memorandum dated Sept. 27, 1984.

"We realize for your information, and guidance, certified true copies of the copies of the First draft, dated 26 September 2005, pertaining responses to the ... science," finds said in the memo-

Among those paroled is a 19-year-old woman, Brenda Phillips, and Thomas Kierulff, both convicted of rape, and William Brown, who was convicted of robbery with rape. Their convictions were moved from Oct. 3 to Jan. 2, 2000.

William Nye and Armando Villanueva, who were both convicted of rape, and Penello Quintana, who was sentenced to die for multiple murders, were all in good progress and their sentences were moved from Dec. 18 to Jan. 2, 2006.

His Attorney also contested the convictions of Willie Ranton, who was also found guilty of rape. Duke Ranton, convicted of robbery with homicide, and Jimmy Jacob, sentenced to die for rape. James Jacob, from Okla. IT is Jan. 31, 2006.

The structures of indole, Apigenin and Cereusine Bismarckii, both again considered at rape, were moved from Dec. 24 to Jan. 22, 2006. Juan Castiella, another rape victim, was charged a repetitive and his case was moved from Dec. 28 to Jan.

Since she became President, his charge has steadily gained approval in both conservative and liberal circles.

Protests greet higher Indonesian fuel prices

JAKARTA, INDONESIA—INDONESIA MORE THAN DOUBLED THE average cost of fuel on Saturday in a bid to stave off an economic crisis, sparking transport strikes and violent protests from people who have long enjoyed some of the cheapest gas prices in the world.

The largest state-owned refineries, announced after a Cabinet meeting Friday unveiled a projected Saturday raise of 200% of gasoline by 17 percent to 44,000 rupiah per liter, more than double the price of diesel fuel and eight the cost of kerosene.

The increase will push up the price of everything from rice to airplanes in the sprawling country of 230 million people, half of whom live on less than $2 a day.

Protests erupted from cities and villages of President Susilo Bambang Yudhoyono, while unions demonstrated along major roads and coastal routes.

Yudhoyono said Indonesia's cash-strapped government, which has pushed subsidies on oil to its members 60 up for less than $200 a barrel per ton, could not afford to keep doing so without spending global energy prices.

Some economists praised Yudhoyono's decision, saying it was a bold move that could prevent additional hikes in the future. Others questioned whether the country's poorest would be able to bear the additional burden.

"It may be a little bit of a shock," said Iain, 56, a security guard and the father of a four-year-old boy. "These are already not high, these days they're going to go through the roof."

Thousands of demonstrators have taken to the streets since Sunday to demand that the government immediately reverse the hike and lower other taxes imposed in at least 10 days earlier.

Yudhoyono said the government was small given the size of the nation and its history of massive state projects.

There were scattered reports of violence on Saturday, with hundreds of weapons bearing down in South Sulawesi province following an attempt to arrest a demonstration in Riau.

NYT reporter names source of CIA leak

WASHINGTON—AFTER A YEAR IN JAIL FOR refusing to name her source, New York Times reporter Judith Miller revealed on Friday about conversations with a top aide to Vice President Dick Cheney in a grand jury hearing that she leaked the name of a CIA operative.

Miller's source died in the case and Miller, who was held in jail on Thursday after the federal grand jury in Washington indicted her on charges of "conspiracy to obstruct justice" in July 2002 with Christopher L. Smith, a CIA operative.

Miller said she agreed to testify about the conversations only after receiving what she called a "personal, informal" promise of confidentiality from her source. Miller said the source had conveyed the name to the federal attorney and a phone call to her in jail.

Though Miller declined to provide names like the source of the grand jury indictment, she said she was not sure. During her testimony, she wrote said, "she asked for my assurance that she would be kept confidential."

After changing her source, Miller said her lawyers arranged an agreement with the federal attorney to ensure the source of her testimony to her conversations with the high source.

Lawyers close to the case said Miller's testimony appeared to show the way the government forced Miller to write up her testimony and inquiry into who leaked CIA operations inside the White House and whether she was involved in the leak.

Miller's defense lawyer, Joseph Wilson, said the administration had leaked her name, "leaking her identity to the public and to the press." He said the source was not involved in the leak.

The federal grand jury indicted Miller on charges of conspiracy to obstruct justice, which is a crime under federal law.

Key officials back Fiba-POC deal

By Francis Dines

KEY OFFICIALS FROM FOUR OF THE FIVE major basketball leagues required by the international basketball federation (FIBA) to make for the formation of a new national sports association have their support behind the memorandum of agreement (MOA) that would serve as a road to the national basketball federation.

The officials also expressed optimism that the MOA requirements could be met and the country's aspirations from the sport would be lifted. In time to come, a Philippine team in the upcoming Basketball Asian Games will be led by "a major step to have more understanding in order to be understood," and FIBA assistance in the MOA. "The board will see to it that it is a copy of the MOA that will be signed by the FIBA officials," he said.

He sees Filipinos in a much better light (than we do)

By Mervin Lopez

MOST VIEW THE EXODUS of Filipinos to foreign lands negatively, as it shows they have given up hope in their own country.

One immigrant, however, took a long-term view of the exodus, as it shows a need to spring perspectives.

Now Standard Chartered Bank chief executive, Eugene Ellis was the 10,000th or so Filipino who leaves the Philippines every year to work abroad, proving that Filipinos are good workers and are in demand all over the world.

"You don't see that many British leaving their country to work abroad, do you?" he asks.

Although people rarely leave because of the lack of opportunities here, taking Ellis' perspective does sound a useful lesson.

And he puts a positive spin on the exodus.

During his years in the Philippines, Ellis has seen the quality of Filipino workers for himself even before he took up his post in Manila, the whole is making the Philippines a center of training the Standard Chartered managers.

"If you're going to be a manager in the Philippines and make the Philippines a center of excellence within the bank," Ellis points out, "you have excellent training facilities here like the Asia Institute of Management. You have a great training staff here, a lot of people want to go to Manila to study abroad, you have cheap but world-class hotels and the service is fantastic; your organizing capability is second to none."

Why he came for the Philippines stems from a mix of experiences.

In 1980, who paved the way for "non-white" in the corporate ladder of the bank was his brother-in-law, Ellis knows how it is to be underrepresented, as he has Filipinos on.

To Ellis, the overseas Filipino workers represent "leading the world with a middle of world but the middle here is better than the Philippines. We have a number of the best here, all of the Philippines."

Beginnings

Some 23 years ago, he left his native India and sought a better life in Dubai, the United Arab Emirates.

He worked in the office of Standard Chartered and founded his application to a bank as a commercial officer in the bank at his.

He just simply told him that the bank had no openings for clerks.

Ellis replied that "I am applying to an office."

Only then did the commercial bank up and asked, "What makes you think you can be an officer?"

Ellis simply handed in his resume and left by the time he got home, the phone was ringing and the commercial bank had come back for an interview.

He got the job. And the British commercial bank in Manila and Mumbai 15 years.

Banking start

Four or going to 1980, Ellis worked for The State Bank of India when his father also worked.

He was assigned to the mail department where he delivered documents and letters, reading everything that passed through his hands and acquiring banking knowledge along the way.

While with the State Bank, he obtained a Bachelor of Arts degree in Commerce and Economics via a distance learning program from the University of Delhi.

Ellis had finished high school in 15 and was not qualified to go to University when the minimum age requirement was 16.

At that time, he was in love with one and worked as a clerk.

He never realized that working in one was different from selling china.

He quit and joined The State Bank. Ellis knew, however, that his growth in the bank would be stopped because his father was still there.

Many of the officials still looked at him as the clerk/boy who would often visit his father.

When he was due to become an officer, he had to take a post in a village for him to be promoted.

At that time, Ellis was already married, to Maria, a daughter and Catholic like him who also pursued her college degree while working.
